

mail of the week

INDIA TODAY deserves to be praised for bringing into focus the problems of the tribals in Kharaghoda village of Gujarat. The media should follow the story and not rest till the problem is solved.

No More Division

The people of Andhra Pradesh should know that theirs is the only state which is self-sufficient in all fields—agriculture, minerals, water, among others ("The Quit Fix", March 17). They should not fall prey to the ambitions of the politicians and precipitate a division of the state.

G.M. RAMA RAO,
Ahmedabad

The en masse resignation of TRS MPs and MLAs is a ploy to garner goodwill of the people. Telangana's formation will only give impetus to the Naxalites.

K.V. RAGHURAM, Wayanad

Schooling Troubles

It is sad to know the state of affairs of the Sainik Schools ("Schools of Neglect", March 17). The schools have been hijacked by the rich since the kind of discipline and overall development of a child they provide, at just Rs 60,000 per annum, is not available anywhere in this country.

RAJAGOPAL N.S., Coimbatore

As Large as Life

The difference between political power and wealth-sharing power in India is similar to that between exploitation of opportunism and opportunity ("High and Mighty", March 10).

Y.G. CHOUKSEY, Pune

It was fascinating to read the snippets of information about the people in the power list. These 50 people are proofs of what India has achieved in the 60 years of Independence.

H.R. BAPU SATYANARAYANA,
Mysore

The special issue was a collector's item. I knew that Ratan Tata would be at the top of the list. Thanks for restoring my faith in the man. Long live his breed!

GAYATRI GAHLAUT, on e-mail

Farce Faces

There are just two sexes: male and female, and there cannot be any third one ("New Sexual Revolution", March 17). Thus, sexual minority is a fabricated term. The so-called third sex group consists of males who have no intention of merging with the mainstream. The concept of human rights is being abused by this criminal group.

BHAGIRATHI MAHASUAR,
Bhubaneswar

WINNING HANDS DOWN

The best way to overcome Australian arrogance is to defeat them in a fair game of cricket—a feat India achieved in style with the added topping of humbling them in their backyard, not once but in two consecutive finals ("New World Order" March 17).

J. AKSHOBHYA, Mysore

Dhoni and his boys should now play the upcoming series against the Proteas in the same spirit.

K. PRADEEP, Chennai

Though the win against Australia was not a flash in the pan, we have to be consistent to be the crowned king.

BAL GOVIND, on e-mail

The Aussies should now be fed boiled weeds so that they can regain their sledging strength.

RAVI BEDI, Jodhpur

Years Ago in India Today

APRIL 16-30, 1978

Kingdom Without a King

Our jeep jolted to a halt before the border town of Rangpo. The Nepalese driver leapt out to survey the scene and said, "We will cross into Sikkim now. All this was India." "But Sikkim is a part of India," we said. "That is what they say," he replied. It was under the shrewd gaze of New Delhi thousands of miles away that Sikkim changed governments. In April 1975, the The Chogyal Government of India introduced the 36th Amendment Act making Sikkim the 22nd state of the Indian Union. The Sikkim issue, which had earlier developed into a national debate a year ago, never got complete hearing due to the declaration of Emergency. In Gangtok, the deposed Chogyal's eldest son's death has caused a sudden tightening of political reflexes all around. The Sikkimese continue to recognise Chogyal as the divine defender of their faith.
