

IS SPIRITUALITY RELEVANT TO LEADERSHIP?

Creating new possibilities by looking within and leading

"Spiritually bereft leaders manage by chance"

When one's ability to experience life transcends the limitations of the physical, we call it a spiritual process. The physicality of what we are right now, our experience of this, is coming to us essentially through the five senses. Every thing that happens in your living experiences happens within yourself. But your five senses have no access to this within because they are outward bound. Now, the spiritual process happens when human intelligence recognises that we are existing without knowing the essential nature of who we are. The seeking that arises within you following this realisation is the spiritual process. What is the basis of seeking? If you seek something, first and foremost, you realise that you don't know. When this longing to know arises, seeking follows.

In what way is spirituality relevant to leadership? Now, who is a leader? We are looking forward to a leader not to repeat the past for us. If a leader just functions on the physical and intellectual terms, he is a poor leader because his body and mind are chained to the past. His mind is constantly functioning from past information. We are looking forward to a leader to create something that other people could not perceive. If his perception is limited to the sense organs, he does not see anything new. No new possibilities will arise.

In the last century, human beings have done more than what they did in the last 10,000 years. We are hugely empowered. Despite all these, we have been groping in the dark. We will do something today, we will regret 25 years later. We are progressing this way because there is no perception of life the way it is. Our whole understanding of life is coming from just logical intellect which is functioning on limited information. Logical intellect is not instrument enough to perceive the non-physical dimensions of life. Assuming that whatever is not in my knowing or my experience cannot exist, is the crown of ignorance. If a leader can't experience life beyond his body and intellect, he'll not create a new possibility for humanity. So without the spiritual element, a leader is definitely handicapped whether he is political, economic or otherwise.

A leader is someone who takes a chance on the destiny of a large mass of people. He's a leader because he is capable of organising and directing situations to the desired goal. But that only happens if a leader has some mastery over himself. It is extremely important for you to remain free of the situation outside you. The reason why people face crisis is

"SPIRITUALITY IS ENHANCING YOUR PERCEPTION OF LIFE FROM ITS ORIGIN TO ITS ULTIMATE."
