which has topped two prestigious streams: arts and science. To be best in just one is brilliant enough but what words does one use to describe a college that provides unchallenged excellence in two major streams for two consecutive years. Extraordinary in its case is an understatement.

Like SRCC, Loyola refuses to be complacent. In science it has enhanced the quality of its research facilities and introduced rare courses such as plant bio-tech and advanced zoology even while actively helping social causes like preventing the shrinking of the nearby Pulicat lake. Its arts faculty too lays emphasis on the overall development of its students while constantly enhancing its facilities. The college library has over 1 lakh books and its digital wing ensures 24x7 access for its students.

In the professional streams, there is AIIMS, which despite the political turbulence over the continuance of its director, P. Venugopal, retains the premier position this year too with an incredible overall score of 100. The crush of patients—over 10,000 come for treatment to its hospital daily—should have been a handicap for teaching. Instead, the challenge is turned into an opportunity by training students to excel despite the tremendous pressure.

LIKE JUSTICE, COLLEGES MUST not only do it but also be seen to be doing it to change perceptions about their standing.

Then there are IITs, a league among themselves, whose supremacy remains unchallenged. So they compete among themselves and 2008 saw IIT Delhi regain the top slot which it had yielded to IIT Kanpur last year. The emphasis is, as its Director Surendra Prasad says, "on constant innovation". So every effort is made to make the curriculum more flexible and allow the students to design their own courses.

Finally there is the National
