

Bachcha UNPLUGGED

■ By Kaveree Bamzai

Amitabh Bachchan, patriarch of Bollywood's first family, the all-time highest grossing Hindi film star of 134 films with a cumulative box-office revenue of over Rs 3,700 crore, the face of 20 brands, and currently the nation's best-known blogger, is busy. He has his arms around the waists of his son, Abhishek, and daughter-in-law Aishwarya, and he's tickling them. Abhishek keeps a straight face, but Aishwarya can't help bursting into her trademark laugh. "People keep saying that I giggle," she says. "They should see what I have to put up with sometimes." Abhishek has already mock-threatened his father for getting too close to his wife of just over a year. He asks Aishwarya, "is this as close as we can get?" Amitabh is complaining about his son spoiling his hairdo while Aishwarya is being shown a mirror by her husband's make-up artist. It's just another day for Pa, Bhaiyya and Baby, in the House of Bachchan, at their
