

"India's Best Colleges: an exclusive survey", June 2, 2008
"Extensive research has been done over the top institutes in all disciplines. It's difficult to get such detailed information in a single package."

VIRENDRA K. TANGRI, on e-mail

Educating Study

The cover story ("India's Best Colleges", June 2) was informative, analytical and immensely useful in guiding students in choosing colleges. INDIA TODAY's annual survey of academic excellence has really grown into a comprehensive study now, with more city-wise rankings.

VITULL K. GUPTA, Bhatinda

The efforts put into the cover story are commendable. It would be good if you could add B-schools also to the survey. The Ready Reckoner is helpful and city-wise rankings impressive. It is still disappointing not to find any college from Thiruvananthapuram though.

A. JACOB SAHAYAM,
Thiruvananthapuram

I have just finished my schooling and this issue has helped me immensely in deciding my future course of action. My only suggestion is, instead of taking the top 25 colleges in a particular field, the names of top 100 colleges should be given. Not everyone can get into the top 25 institutes and a bigger list would help one know the other available options.

PAVAN BHAMBHANI, Ahmedabad

We have, undoubtedly, been scaling new heights and creating new milestones in education. But no one raises any questions on the credibility and quality of education being provided in these top colleges. The bigger question which should have been addressed is: are they really able to make good and successful citizens?

RATAN SHARGA, on e-mail

INDIA TODAY's annual list of top colleges has no doubt become a barometer of excellence in collegiate education in India. But it is a shame that the students passing out of these colleges are self-centred and greedy. Making money becomes their only aim in life with their moral and social responsibilities being thrown out of the window.

K.C. KUMAR, Bangalore

I would like INDIA TODAY to change the parameters of judging best colleges or at least mention how many 'genuine' and 'tainted' politicians or leaders they have produced. This will add to the credibility of the institutions and the personality-building opportunities they provide for tomorrow's leaders.

RAJNEESH BATRA, Delhi

It is important to provide avenues for higher education in smaller towns to turn them into high-productivity centres. Millions of Indians wish to pursue higher studies but there aren't enough colleges to accommodate them or they are too expensive. The government should open new colleges every year. There should also be colleges for the middle class and poorer sections of society.

MAHESH KAPASI, Delhi

The criteria adopted in the survey seems to be inadequate in one respect. There is no weightage to the eminence of the faculty. As a retired academican, I feel that any such grading should include the quality of the teaching staff as an essential criterion.

A.N. NIGAM, Lucknow

Remembering a Legend

Few modern playwrights have made a mark to the extent that Vijay Tendulkar did (Obituary: Vijay Tendulkar, June 2). He had complete control over his art and of no less significance was his contribution as an intellectual and socio-political commentator.

AMITABH THAKUR, Lucknow