

WHY AND WHO DID IT?

THE JAIPUR BLASTS EXPOSE THE LACK OF INTELLIGENCE AND SYSTEMS TO COMBAT TERROR WHILE INNOCENTS SUFFER

■ By Rohit Parihar

Terrorism makes no distinction between its victims. When the Pink City experienced its first terror strike on that fateful Tuesday of May 13, the victims were Muslims and Hindus alike, poor and affluent, men, women and children. Like four-year-old Subhana shopping with her family in Johri Bazar, a popular marketplace in the walled city. Late Tuesday evening, she stepped into a fireball that killed her mother Sumehra, and two teenaged aunts, Asma Khan, 16, and Anie Khan, 12. The child, with her mother, had come for summer vacations from Mumbai, where her father Mustafa Khan works. A hundred yards away, at a temple at the entrance to Sanganeri Gate, 11 pundits began a ritual in the evening on this pious day when an explosion ripped

EXPLOSIONS THAT RIPPED THE CITY

7:30 p.m.

At Hanuman temple,
Chandpole Gate

7:32 p.m.

At Manak Chowk police station and another near Ganesh temple