

"The New Power Duo",
March 3, 2008

"Forming the government would hardly be the end of worries for PPP and PML(N) as President Musharraf still retains a lot of power."

S. BALAKRISHNAN, Jamshedpur

REUTERS

Twin Towers

Pakistan's re-entry into the democratic process augurs well for its people ("The New Power Duo", March 3). It is imperative for PPP and PML(N) to bury their hatchet and provide a clean governance to set the stage for Musharraf's impeachment.

S. LAKSHMI, on e-mail

Although the coalition government will ensure that there are right checks and balances in the governance of the nation, the past hostilities of PPP and PML(N) are bound to catch up with them sooner or later.

NALINI VIJAYARAGHAVAN,
Thiruvananthapuram

It is an unethical political alliance between two rival parties headed by Nawaz Sharif and Asif Ali Zardari. They have different ideologies and principles, and have come together under compulsion in order to clip Musharraf's wings. Whether they will be able to normalise the situation in Pakistan, only time will tell.

RATAN SHARGA, on e-mail

The world knew that Pakistan President's popularity graph was on a downswing but even his worst denigrators had not imagined that PML(q) would receive such a drubbing.

J.S. ACHARYA, Hyderabad

Political compulsions may have brought Zardari and Sharif together, but they have to now ensure that Parliament reigns supreme in their country too.

A. JACOB SAHAYAM,
Thiruvananthapuram

The people of Pakistan have won this round of the fight against dictatorship. All the king's men have fallen, their fiefdoms been invaded, their protective armour been penetrated into by one simple tool of the common man—the vote.

VITULL K. GUPTA, Bhatinda

Both Zardari and Sharif may have got their big chance, but none of them is a great visionary. They are not capable of conceiving sound strategies to tackle complex challenges.

ARVIND K. PANDEY, Allahabad

The new czars of Pakistan can bring the country back from the brink of disaster and serve as harbingers of hope for the world.

VIRENDRA KUMAR TANGRI,
Dehradun

This is an opportunity for democracy to take root in Pakistan, which is in our better interests too. Let the stalled peace process be resumed between the two countries as soon as civilian government is installed in Islamabad.

D.B.N. MURTHY, Bangalore

Left to Perish

The Left parties are destined to die a natural death mainly because of their double standards towards development activities in the country ("Clash of the Red Brigade", March 3). To top it all, their top rung leaders are fighting among themselves instead of working together.

K.V. RAGHURAM, Wayanad

Cricketers on Sale

One cannot say for sure how the auction of some players is going to help improve the game of cricket ("The Big Bazaar", March 3). In fact the interest shown by several bidders for Andrew Symonds who has so far been behaving very badly with our players is an insult to Indian sensibilities.

RAMESH AGARWAL, Kanpur

IPL is heading for a major disaster as it will become a mutual admiration society