Gandhian Rock 'n' Roll

DELHI He has been nominated for the Nobel Prize, the Oscars and the Grammy, though he never got to lay his hands on any of them. Now Peter David Hewson, otherwise known as Bono is a potential Gandhi Peace Prize winner. When the Ministry of Culture asked Members of Parliament to send in their nominations for the prize, it was not prepared for a rock star to be nominated. However, this is exactly what has happened with Milind Deora, the young MP representing Mumbai South, nominating the Ireland-born lyricist of the popular band U2 for the award. Deora has

NOTES OF PEACE: Bono also got two other MPs who agree with him.

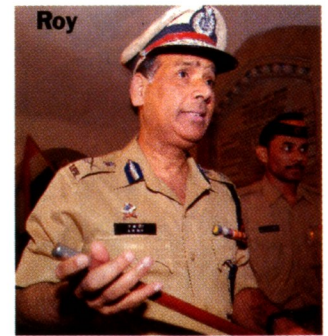

The Rs 1-crore Gandhi Peace Prize is the highest award given by the Centre to a person in any field to acknowledge his/her contribution to Mahatma Gandhi's legacy of working towards establishing peace and harmony in the world. Previous recipients of this award include former president of Tanzania Julius Nyerere, the Ramakrishna Mission, the late Baba Amte and Coretta Scott King, widow of the late American civil rights leader Martin Luther King.

The guitar-strumming Deora cannot be faulted for nominating the rock star whose frontline role in several social causes cannot be minimised. Unfortunately, the jury consists of, among others, the prime minister and the Leader of the Opposition, all of whom are 70 plus. Deora's nomination of the rock star is certain to elicit a response which is more likely to be "Bono Who?" by Priya Sahgal MUMBAI In a move that is sure to win him accolades from Shiv Sena chief Bal Thackeray and his nephew Raj, Maharashtra's newly appointed Director General of Police, A.N. Roy, has directed the state's Indian Police Service (IPS) officers to learn Marathi.

warned all officers who did not know Marathi or were not comfortable speaking it, to hone their language skills over the next one year.

The former commissioner of Mumbai Police, whose fluency in the state's official language is well known, was apparently disturbed when some junior officers preferred to communicate with him in Hindi and English. He has urged the state cadre to learn Marathi to facilitate administrative work and build a better rapport with the locals. With the DGP's new orders and the Shiv Sena stepping up its demand for Marathi to be adopted as the official language in the Brihanmumbai Municipal Corporation, it's profit time for Marathi speaking classes.
