

THE RAINMAKER

Falguni Nayar

45, MD, Kotak Mahindra Capital

When she was young, Falguni Nayar was encouraged to look at different career choices. But her mind was made up. It was going to be business management. After an MBA at IIM-Ahmedabad, where she was one of nine girls in a class of 140, Nayar worked at a management consulting firm before moving to Kotak Mahindra in 1993. She set up the company's operations in London and in the US, found her own space in the London business world's old boys club and even dabbled, albeit briefly, in mergers and acquisitions. This new-age investment banker, one half of a power couple (husband Sanjay is CEO Citibank, India) and mother of twins is master of all.

Amrita Gangotra

42, CIO, Mobility and Airtel IT Operations

HEMANT CHAWLA

The rickshaw driver pulls over to take a call. The roadside paanwala has long conversations on a break. This is the new-age global link connecting people worldwide and one of the people taking it to them is the CIO of Mobility and Airtel IT operations, Amrita Gangotra. With 16 years of experience in companies like Allen Bradley, Nestle and HCL, she has now added Airtel to her bio-data. Gangotra had built a fine track record in the technical and business development fronts, and is now expanding the company's reach to the rural consumer. "We used to benchmark ourselves with other telecoms, today we are being benchmarked," says Gangotra, the mother of a 14-year-old daughter.

FIRST INVESTMENT
Saving tax is the first concern when starting out, so I bought an LIC
policy in the early 1990s.

BEST RETURNS IN THE NEXT FIVE YEARS
Balance the portfolio
between debt, equity,
property, mutual funds
and life insurance as dividing the risk is beneficial in the long run.

SMARTEST INVEST-MENT CHOICE AND WHY Bought a piece of land in Noida and built a house. The value has risen manifold since then.
