

1 UDAY SANKAR ROY

A post-graduate in science, he has been working with SBI for the last 35 years and is now MD and CEO of SBI Life Insurance.

2 AMIT TANDON

MD of Fitch Ratings India, who did his MBA from Cambridge, Tandon was with the ICICI Group for 17 years.

3 REETA GUPTA

Gupta, who has an MBA degree from Symbiosis, Pune, started the fastfood chain Jumbo King in 2001.

4 KAKU NAKHATE

The MD and co-head of equities at DSP Merrill Lynch has been in the financial sector for 20 years.

5 ANJALI BANSAL

She is the MD of the India operations of the global executive search firm Spencer Stuart.

not leaving IT TO HIM

He who wears the pants carries the pocketbook? Not at all. In most urban dual-income households, time-tested rules of saving and spending are making way for consultation and consensus.

As financial diva Suze Orman says, "Women can invest, save, and handle debt as well and skillfully as any man. So why don't they?" In urban India, this dysfunctional relationship between women and money is changing. With women earning mega bucks, the sacred rules of saving and spending are being rewritten. Yet earning smarts don't always make women key decision makers when it comes to investing for the family, whether they are bankers or entrepreneurs. So what does money mean to the modern Indian man and woman? Long-term security or short-term spending sprees? Or both? Five