"Chaos at Airports",
May 5, 2008

"Chaos at airports not only exposes the signs and symptoms of a collapsing system but also shows the lopsided priorities of our policy makers."

VITULL K. GUPTA, Bhatinda

Left Hanging in the Air

There is no feeling of nationalism among the airport staff to incorporate innovative ideas for better passenger amenities ("Chaos at Airports", May 5).

Y.G. CHOUKSEY, Pune

The story on the modernisation and expansion of airports is appropriate except that it has not dealt with the opposition that the unions and political parties pose. Still stuck in the 20th century, together they are the greatest impediment to India's progress.

SILADITYA GHOSH, on e-mail

Despite our nation being buoyed by an awe-inspiring growth of our aviation industry fuelled by low-cost airlines, the growth has been grotesquely lopsided with too much, perhaps, coming too soon.

NALINI VIJAYARAGHAVAN,
Thiruvananthapuram

By allowing an unprecedented expansion in the flights in our country, the policy makers have put the cart before the horse.

D.B.N. MURTHY, Bangalore

Your cover story has come at the right time. It should now bring into focus the ordeal passengers face daily. Civil Aviation Minister Praful Patel—known as a man of ideas—should sit back and listen to the advice the magazine has offered him in trying to tackle the problem.

A. JACOB SAHAYAM,
Thiruvananthapuram

The chaos at the airports in the US and the UK is no different from the one we face here due to the extensive security measures in the aftermath of 9/11. Indian airports can improve if airport management is given to a single agency as opposed to the multiple levels of responsibility.

V.K. RAMAN, on e-mail

It is sad to see our airports going steadily downhill considering the fact that the country's railway and bus stations are constantly improving their services.

K. CHIDANAND KUMAR,
Bangalore

A House Divided

In case of a hung assembly, the chief minister should be elected by a secret and compulsory vote of all MLAs through EVMS on nominations signed by at least one-third members ("Down to the Wire", May 5).

MADHU AGRAWAL, Delhi

If the people in Karnataka are sensible enough, then considering what H.D. Deve Gowda did, his party should be wiped out in the upcoming polls.

RAMESH AGARWAL, Kanpur

Cricket's Off-side

Although the cash that IPL will provide can be an incentive for any player, especially those who are yet to enter the national scene, it is sad to see that money has taken the centrestage ("20-20 Fever", May 5).

MAHESH KUMAR DADRWAL,
Jaipur

IPL has turned cricket into a fast food, which can never be a substitute for a good, balanced diet. The current tournament has become a heady cocktail of fast-forward cricket, undue glamour, semi-nude dancers and 24X7 news channels.

R.D. SINGH, Leh

Most questions being raised about IPL are a result of our century-old distrust of anything that guarantees quick money. Our socialist mentality refuses to accept those who dare to succeed. Let us stop being Cassandras of doom and admire what India has done to world cricket. For once, let us congratulate the BCCI.
