

■ By Kaveree Bamzai

Mad moguls who would spend 17 years making a film, men who would mortgage their houses to make the movie of their dreams and women who would drink themselves to heart-break. There was a time when such characters were thick underfoot in Bollywood. Egos were not humungous, ambitions were, and hype was not excessive, talent was. Back then Bollywood was not, of course, known by that wannabe name. It was Bombay.

HOW INDIA WATCHES MOVIES

Small towns prefer pirated DVDs, 15-34-year-olds throng theatres, television makes much more money than its shinier cousin. Here's what happens when Bollywood gets analysed.

