

A photograph of two young boys playing soccer in a dry, desert-like environment. The boy on the left is wearing a light blue t-shirt and jeans, and the boy on the right is wearing a dark blue long-sleeved shirt and red pants. They are both smiling and looking at a yellow and red soccer ball on the ground. In the background, there is a barbed wire fence and a clear blue sky. The ground is dry and dusty, and the overall scene is bathed in warm, golden light.

Barriers break when people talk

The simple act of talking can bring the world together. In the future, countries will no longer be divided by languages but shall be united in dialogue. Families will come together in lively conversations. And people will be set free by reason, understanding and speech. Simply put, the world will be a better place, if only we talk to each other.