

Wonder Business

Your article on waste management ("Cash from Trash", July 14) was enlightening. The process of turning waste materials into high profit-yielding business requires sharp acumen. These young entrepreneurs can motivate others who are looking for new avenues. VIRENDRA KUMAR TANGRI, on e-mail

India is replete with unique breed of entrepreneurs, who, with the help of their out-of-the-box thinking, are ready to take on the world. Every single person can contribute in his own way to keeping the environment clean and green. Kudos to INDIA TODAY for highlighting their untold stories. MAYANK MATHUR, on e-mail

There should be stringent rule for a time-bound decision on mercy petitions filed before the President against death sentence ("In Search of a Hangman", July 14). This inordinate delay in decision making creates unnecessary hassles and provocation, apart from diluting fear against committing the crime. SUBHASH C. AGRAWAL, on e-mail

Time to Act

Our former President A.P.J. Abdul Kalam ("The Great Need", July 7) talks about launching 10 satellites through a single launch and the impending mission to moon. But how have these contributed or will contribute to the uplift of the common man? This objective is certainly not realisable ever, definitely not by 2020. Are we not deluding ourselves by going gaga over our past achievements? It's time to act, not just talk.

Tackling Terror

The unilateral declaration of ceasefire by the Alpha and Charlie companies of the 28th battalion of the ULFA ("Going for the Kill", July 14) is definitely a step in the right direction. It may be right on Assam Chief Minister Tarun Gogoi's part to say that ULFA has been serving the interests of the ISI but at the same time the apprehensions of Mrinal Hazarika that the Assamese may soon be reduced to minorities in their own land cannot be ignored. It is high time the Assam Government rose above vote bank politics and made some serious efforts to curb the infiltration of Bangladeshis.

HOLY SMOKE

It's a pity that our politicians use every crisis to score brownie points against each other ("An Unholy Order", July 14). A trivial issue like land transfer to the Amarnath Shrine Board triggered violent protests across Jammu and Kashmir throwing life out of gear. This was nothing but politicking at its worst. Politicians can overlook common people's interest and put their gains above everything else.

D.B.N. MURTHY, Bangalore

Mayhem in Kashmir created by secessionists stands testimony to the fact that the insurgency still exists. The Government should have shown firm resolution to implement the decision and made insurrection ineffective.

INDU SHANKAR, Varanasi

The proposed land was to be used to provide better facilities during arduous sojourn of pilgrims. So what was the need for the hue and cry?

Much Ado About Nothing

Dealing with the Janata Party crisis is like watching an elephant become pregnant. Everything takes place at a very high level, there is a lot of commotion and it takes 22 months for anything to happen. In the meantime, of course, everyone is so worked up about the goings-on that the party itself—and, for that matter, the Government—is totally forgotten. It is doubtful whether Prime Minister Morarji Desai or other ministers have been able to pay much attention to government affairs during all these weeks. Ponderous policy statements are made one day and promptly denied a few weeks later. Minister of Industries, George Fernandes, says that big business houses are a pest but his ministry quietly hands out industrial and other licences to the big business houses.
