

BITTEN BY THE GLAMOUR BUG: Verma's journey from the studio to Fashion Week

thrown to the media from the time they pledge their allegiance to the industry. Charming the glitterati with politically correct statements during press conferences is just one tiny aspect. Meeting the right people in the industry, inviting renowned faces to walk the ramp, organising shoots and interviews becomes a part of the ballgame. Verma had models like Bhawna Sharma and Michelle Innes walk the ramp for his label and socialites like Kalyani Chawla, the brand ambassador for Dior in India, championing him.

Fashion czars like Rohit Bal, Tarun Tahiliani and J.J. Valaya have lubricated this Rs 198-crore fashion industry and now newcomers like Verma have stationed their lives at the threshold of an experimental India. Where each fold, stitch and cut boosts their idea of perfection—where Versace stands closer to Van Gogh. And fashion can easily become faff.

Photographs by BANDEEP SINGH

