Career Wisdom

Are You at Risk of Career Derailment?

Getting bumped off the track on your way to the top, isn't that every high-achiever's recurring nightmare? How can you be sure it doesn't happen to you? Contemplate the following career-derailing errors uncovered in research by expert. If you get a little "uh oh" reaction to reading them, you'll know where to put your energies:

1. Disagreements with higher management.

Obviously this is a no-no, even if your point of view is correct. Those who would rather be right than promoted almost always get their wish.

2. Problems with team building.

You need to be good at spotting talent. Building diversity, developing talent and helping your people work together effectively are also core capabilities that you can't do without for very long.

3. Problems developing working relationships.

If people don't want to be around you, your career's in trouble. Bullying, isolation and being out of the loop in various ways all torpedo corporate careers.

4. Lack of follow-through.

When you consistently forget to follow-up on promises and don't attend to important details, people notice and question the wisdom of handing you anything else to forget. Anything on that list sound familiar? If not, take a second look or consult a friend. Psychologists tell us that self-evaluation is a terrible indicator of performance. To be on the safe side, ask somebody who knows you well (and will tell you the truth) to have a look at the list and give you some objective feedback. When it comes to keeping your career on track, what you don't know about yourself will definitely hurt you!
