Who would imagine that a bunch of precocious 24-year-olds would be well-equipped to advise the Indian Government on how to formulate more sound policies? If you are former president A.P.J. Abdul Kalam, who will step behind the podium on September 13 to mentor PGP-M students at IIM-Ahmedabad (IIM-A) as part of a programme called Globalising Resurgent India through Innovative Transformation, you are probably thinking what nobody else is. To let a bright bunch of individuals, galvanised by their own mercurial intellect, compete and deliver what a couple of hundred MPs have not been able to; all this because their institution has yet again proved it is in a class of its own. IIM-A—Business Today (BT) Best B-school survey's topper for 2008-2009—has proved no hyperbole is too much to be able to describe its attributes.

The undisputed leader for half a decade, IIM-A maintains its league

among all the stakeholders including young executives, aspiring MBAs and recruiters. Says Vani Kabra, graduate of the London School of Economics (LSE) and MBA graduate from IIM-A, "While LSE was more diverse, IIM-A was definitely tougher and the quality of students far superior." It was at IIM-A that she received a true grounding in teamwork.
