

The Indian tragedy is political. Those who have the power to seek the truth have already abandoned the quest. Gujarat and other infamies of India will remain unpunished as long as the political class is steeped in lies.

VICTIM OF HATE: Gujarat seems to be forgiven as well as forgotten privilege. There are graphic descriptions of rape and butchery, of police collaboration and subversion of the legal process. We may quote the poet: after such knowledge, what forgiveness?

In India, though, after knowing more than what we want to, Gujarat seems to be forgiven as well as forgotten. There have been perfunctory murmurings of revulsion and the customary finger-wagging, but Gujarat is not a moral priority of our political class. BJP, understandably, has to stand by one of its few popular leaders. Modi, once the most demonised Indian politician who was even denied entry into America (Ahmedinejad was luckier), has already acquired a new vocabulary of
