

STYLE LIGHTS

CRICKET CUE:

Aussie batsman Michael Clarke and girlfriend Lara Bingle not only came for Falguni & Shane Peacock's show, but also desired to walk the ramp for "any designer" possible, a little birdie told us.

SINGH ALONG:

Mumbai designer A.D. Singh turned up at the LFW venue with policemen in tow. The bone of contention? A photograph printed on a LFW hoarding by associate sponsor Gitanjali Lifestyle. While Singh claims the picture is his and Neeta Lulla has been credited for it, Lulla denies all knowledge of this. With Singh having filed a police complaint, we wonder why the Gitanjali Group is still keeping mum. Sil-ence is golden, eh?

the empty seats at most shows were proof of a less-than-enthusiastic audience response. The standing ovations were predictably reserved for Sabyasachi Mukherjee's enthralling Indian couture show Chandbibi, Arjun Khanna's absolutely paisa vasool menswear show People of the Golden Triangle and the ever-surprising Narendra Kumar's menswear collection. While Mukherjee's models languorously sauntered out on the wine-washed velvet runway to the tunes of Nusrat Fateh Ali Khan, he retained his trademark layered look where polka dots, brocade and ikat met shararas, lehengas, saris, angarkhas and odhnas. A

« NO BOUNDS:
Rahul & Firdos's ivory seamless line was impressive

MANDAR DEODHAR

» PERFECT:
Muted shades met stylish chic in Rathod's line Past Forward wild array of colours met a gorgeous interplay of fabrics and the finesse of cuts, textures and contrasts. Khanna, on the other hand, made a formidable LFW comeback, overwhelming audiences with an army of 70 male models displaying a line of impeccably crafted and intricately embroidered garments. But Ahmed took the cake and had the entire orchestra, with a nan khatai wedding band, introduce his marital collection, a fine example of his superbly executed trademark structured look, with Abraham

« PRETTY PLEAT:
Transparency met pleats in Nachiket Barve's line

MANDAR DEODHAR

