

FOR A COMPLETE FINAN

■ By Narayan Krishnamurthy

In the 1980s, the Operation Flood campaign ensured that families made milk a vital part of their diet. Milk sales soared as a result. That was followed by a campaign to popularise eggs, which, of course, led to higher consumption of eggs. Yes, marketing works. Particularly if the product itself is good, but relatively unknown or unpopular. It's worked very well for insurance. Over the years, the industry has been working quietly to ensure that insurance is treated not merely as a tax-saving tool but as an instrument to protect the financial well-being of one's dependents, and an effective wealth-creation and tax-saving tool.

Insurance can be the foundation of a sound financial plan. Says

Bengaluru-based financial planner B. Srinivasan: "It's one of the few products that actually has a financial start and finish. It will serve just about any individual as a good investment

FOOTLOOSE

PROFILE

Young, no dependents, just started earning

NEED

Low protection, high asset creation and accumulation

PLAN

Low death benefit; choose a market-linked plan with growth/balanced option on asset creation

STARTING OUT

PROFILE

Recently married, no kids

NEED

Reasonable protection, still high on asset creation

PLAN

Increase death benefit, choose/continue the growth/balanced option on the asset creation ULIP

FAMILY FORTUNES

PROFILE

Married with young children

NEED

Higher protection, high on asset creation; begin savings for children

PLAN

Increase death benefit; continue with the asset-creation ULIP; use top-ups to grow your accumulation

INSURANCE THROUGH