

TEJI BACHCHAN
[b1914]

Driving Force

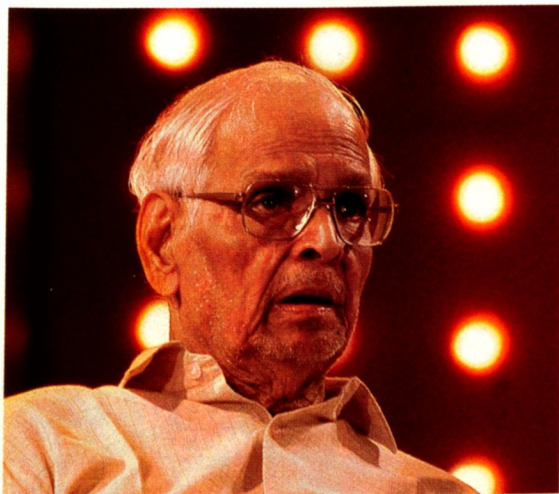

She wasn't just superstar Amitabh Bachchan's mother and celebrated poet Harivansh Rai Bachchan's wife. A social worker in her own right and an amateur artiste, Teji was a close friend of Indira Gandhi and eased the Italian bahu's admission into the family.

S.C. SHUKLA [b1925]

Born to Rule

P. BHASKARAN
[b1924]

Poet at Large

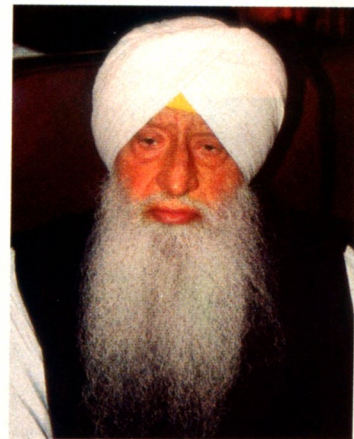

In the theatre of Kerala's history, he was the eloquent barnstormer. Finding expression first in the Communist movement, and then in the world of cinema, the lyricist never shied away from getting down to the brass tacks of modernisation and social change. The poet in him was irrepressible, even in the films he directed.

SAHIB SINGH VERMA
[b1943]

The Delhiwallah

When he gave up academics for politics, little did the Jat from Delhi know he would be a darling of the masses. In a career that saw him touch the heights of political stardom, the Sangh Parivar loyalist became chief minister of Delhi and was also labour minister.
