

KAMLESHWAR [b1917] Story of a Lifetime

His stories lent Hindi literature a much-needed touch of contemporary realism. A journalist, editor and script-writer, Kamleshwar's lifelong engagement with the common man in an ever-changing society spawned works that addressed sensitive issues.

PRAMOD PUSHKARNA

L.M. THAPAR [b1930] Paper Tiger

He set up a paper empire when the coal industry was still fraught with excessive control, and defended his group's flagship company, Ballarpur Industries, from a hostile takeover. While his love for the good life never ebbed, Thapar gave up his anti-MNC ideology and reduced global competition to pulp.

SHAM LAL [b1912] Erudite Editor

The master of the written word lived his life surrounded by books, literally. For sheer critical flair, Sham Lal was unrivalled. He brought to his columns in The Times of India a familiarity of Western thought and a knowledge of literary greats that had readers asking for more.

BHARAT RAM [b1914] Versatile Weaver

The Harvard-educated entrepreneur knew his golf strokes and Hindustani ragas as well as he knew his textiles. During his mutually beneficial association with DCM that began in 1935, Bharat Ram spun a success story by thinking ahead of his time.

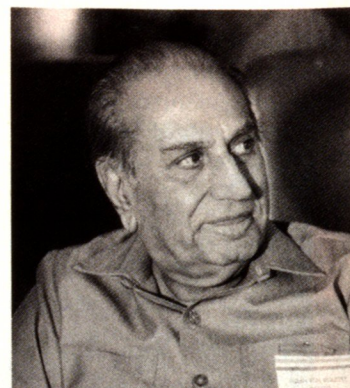

PIYAL BHATTACHARJEE

S.R. BOMMAI [b1923] A Case In Point

As the Karnataka chief minister who was wronged, he lent his name to the oft-cited Supreme Court judgement that limited the power of the Centre to dismiss a state government, but more importantly, the Janata Dal leader, who later formed his own party, played a crucial role in the unification of Karnataka.

G.P. SIPPY [b1914] Hit Master

His Sholay was the piece de resistance of the Eastman colour era. The man who made pure entertainment his business and broke box office records died with the knowledge that no remake can come close to his cult classic.
