

DEBASIS PAUL

NARENDRA BISHT

SHARE WEALTH WITH OTHERS

Observing Narayana Murthy conduct business is a learning experience in itself. He once told me that a public limited company is a trustee of public wealth and we must value its contribution. Protecting people's interests should come before personal wealth accumulation. I have tried to incorporate his advice in my company. —As told to Narayan Krishnamurthy

KARAN JOHAR
FILMMAKER

KNOW WHEN TO GIVE UP SUPPORT

Our start-up was in its second year when the dotcom bubble burst in 2001. I asked our venture capitalists, ICICI Ventures, for more funds. Its CEO Renuka Ramnath heard me out and said something that changed the way I thought about business. She said at some stage, every child has to learn to walk on his or her own. At first, he may stumble, fall and hurt himself, but he learns self-sufficiency. With that, Ramnath refused to finance us. But her words inspired me to look for finance the way real businesses do. From then on, profitability apart, we created three companies. —As told to Shankar Aiyar

SOUMIK KAR

ALOK KEJRIWAL
CEO, CONTESTS2WIN.COM

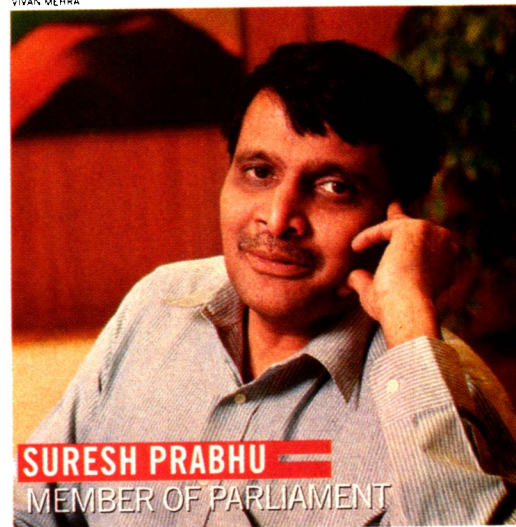

CAPTAIN GOPINATH
V-C, KINGFISHER AIRLINES

ACQUIRE DUAL SKILLS

I was all set to join a law school after I graduated. My father thought I should get some informal advice from one of his friends. He suggested that instead of law, I should consider studying chartered accountancy. His rationale was that this would give me a dual skill-set: I would learn accounting as well as gain some knowledge of the laws related to the field. His foresight was remarkable. I followed the advice and had a successful practice as a chartered accountant for over 20 years before joining politics in 1996. —As told to Rohit Saran

VIVAN MEHRA

SURESH PRABHU
MEMBER OF PARLIAMENT