

GET OUT OF 'COMFORT ZONES' AND EXPLORE

For years, I had been working in the treasury unit of ICICI. I am a lawyer and it was what is popularly called my "line of work". The job was challenging and I was good at it. In 1995, K.V. Kamath joined the ICICI board as non-executive director. In a meeting with him, I made a strategy presentation saying that the biggest challenge for ICICI (in those high-interest and low-liquidity days) would be funding growth. Impressed, he suggested me to head the treasury. I spent nights thinking of reasons why I didn't fit the bill but he convinced me. He told me that he did not want too many lawyers and that if I wanted to be counted, it was time I looked beyond. It was a risky move for me. Looking back, however, it was the best advice I got. Had it not been for Kamath, I would never have realised there were other things that I was interested in and could do well. —As told to Shankkar Aiyar

BE CONTENT WITH ENOUGH. AND 'ENOUGH' IS WHAT YOU HAVE.

The best advice I got with regard to money was from my wife Anita, soon after we got married. She said, "We must learn to be content with enough. And 'enough' is whatever we have at the time." In terms of specific investments, land has been the most lucrative bet of all. The appreciation in real estate has given us some great returns. However, it is a little difficult to sell property, especially at short notice. Agents will always tell you of missed opportunities. If you are out to buy, property prices have ostensibly shot up. If you are out to sell, the market has just gone dry. Of all the advice I received about my career, one that has stuck in my mind is: someone once told me, "Don't change your job every five years. Instead, change your profession." —As told to Rohit Saran

FIGHT FOR JUSTICE

A political leader once told me that one has to always fight for justice. The advice triggered my fight against the government's wireless in local loop policy in 2000. Despite the trauma of fighting the system, I never regretted the decision. The experience taught me that the tainted Indian "system" still had people who believed in values like honesty and integrity. At one point, I came across a quote by singer Bono: "We have to follow through on our ideals or we betray something at the heart of who we are. The culture of idealism is under siege." This further boosted my spirits and I have never looked back since. —As told to Shankkar Aiyar

GO BY YOUR STRENGTH, NOT JUST BY INTEREST

When I was in high school, I was adamant about studying medicine. But my parents disagreed. They thought my acumen lay in economics and mathematics. I always scored well in these subjects and they advised me to make a career in either of the fields. I disagreed, and we argued a lot but their logic finally won. I took up arts for higher studies. There were times when I felt bad that I could not study abroad because of my choice of subject. However, today, I have no regrets. I am happy with my choice of career, which has shaped up very well. There is absolutely no scope for complaint. —As told to Rakesh Rai
