

his diet and speak about his days in New York as if it were in some distant past. "It was my exposure to independence. I took advantage and had a lot of fun," he says. He also invariably finds himself in tabloid columns for dating or breaking off with someone.

3. Get a mentor It helps, even if you have a famous last name, a necessary but not a sufficient condition for fame. Take Mukesh for instance, who has found a mentor in producer Pooja Shetty and speaks of Adi-bhaiyya (as in Aditya Chopra) as if he were a demi-god. He was an assistant director on Yash Raj Films' Mujhse Dosti Karoge and says he will do anything to work there. It's the same with Ranbir, who went straight from film school in New York to Sanjay Leela Bhansali's office having written a detailed resume. He may have shopped for clothes in London and Paris with his
