Petrol, diesel and LPG prices have been raised. But, by artificially shielding consumers from the full impact of the rise in global crude prices, the government may be mortgaging India's future growth prospects at the altar of coalition politics. Meanwhile, the inflation and interest rates will continue to rise and the fiscal gap will widen. As the macro-economic crisis brews, consumer demand, corporate earnings and the stock market will be hit. What can India do to stave off this global oil shock?
