Putramoh, which means passionate and obsessive love for the male child has been the social and emotional norm since eons. And this has been the root cause of inequality between the male and the female child. This inequality has been pre-ordained, snatching self-confidence from the girl child, who is made to feel incomplete, without a father, husband, brother or son. Though India has been worshipping goddesses Durga, Kali, Lakshmi and Saraswati, yet girl children, sisters, widowed mothers

Kaal—where evil, treason, cheats, liars, thieves, adulterers are prospering. Decency, peace, calm, loyalty, originality, love and trust have been vanquished. There are only two groups, —man and woman and both cannot live without the other. But now the roles have reversed. The power has shifted; taken over by women. Education has turned her into a super-woman. She can simultaneously run, with focus, commitment, concentration and maternal tenderness, both at home and the workplace and emerge victorious. The traditional line—the male loves a whore in bed and a wife in the kitchen—is not applicable now.

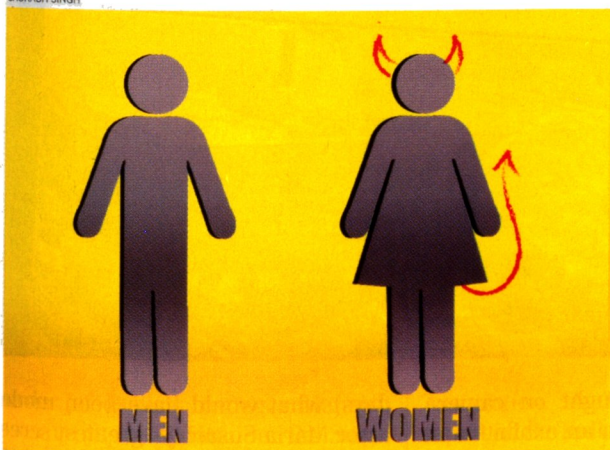

Sex—that burning question! The man, who is so used to demanding sex, is shocked when today's woman asks for it. If not satisfied, she actually dares to look for a satisfactory relationship outside her marriage. Today's woman demands compatibility, not only in bed, but in the kitchen and workplace as well. When the confused male cannot accept this sudden change, he resorts to his only weapon—his masculine sexual prowess. He attacks the woman with an insane fury. Horror stories are floating all over the country—of burning and cutting up one's wife, chopping a young man into 300 pieces, a holy woman in Punjab ordering the murder of her daughter and son-in-law, a reputed member of society and a father is under the scanner for the murder of his daughter.

This is not males being threatened. It is insanity on the loose. The law and order machinery and judiciary pay scant attention to the perversion that coats each murder. The electronic media highlights with glee and gloats over these horrific scenes 24 hours under the farce of "news". Even newspapers are reducing themselves to tabloids salivating on each crime. The economic and cultural imperialism of the West has swamped India in its entirety, especially through the satellite invasion. This has led to the freedom of carrying out crimes, creating excuses for cloning television and cinema programmes. Numerically, the victim is the woman and more often than not, a victim of horrific rape—marital rape, sex without consensus and rape committed by young boys, grown-up men, old men. None spares the victim—the girl child, a teenager, a young or even a middle-aged woman.

It is only spiritual healing, calm introspection, removal and control of the male ego, the correct sublimation and channelisation of women's power that will steadily balance the male and female power structure with equality. And then the universe will spread its arms wide open and embrace our world and once again those words and emotions—love, passion, prestige and honour—will shine in their correct perspective. ■ and wives have been trampled upon and sexually exploited by men with swollen prides. Crimes of passion? Why are we associating a fiery and wonderful word, passion, with crime? Why is Aarushi Talwar's murder being labelled as a murder of "honour" and "prestige"? Why has the society reduced two wonderful words—honour and prestige—to utter degradation?

Our seers say, this is Kali
