

RAVI S SAHANI

"20:20 Vision",
June 16, 2008

"Twenty20 is more of a business-cum-entertainment venture. In times to come, it may become another WWE, where people love getting fooled."

VIJAY DANDIWALA, on e-mail

In a Different League

IPL has something to offer to every one—huge amount of money for the players and the BCCI, profits for the corporates who invested in the venture and wholesale entertainment for the cricket-loving masses ("20:20 Vision", June 16).

ROHIT BHANDIYE, Panaji

The tournament has changed the way cricket is played and watched in the country. It has surely killed the other forms of the game just like short stories have wiped out the novel.

K. CHIDANAND KUMAR, Bangalore

It is good to see that cricket is evolving, as this process will only help the game strengthen its roots and negate the chances of stagnation.

NUTAN THAKUR, Lucknow

The cover story was well analysed and presented.

The number crunching reporting was fabulous. Twenty cheers to the team who worked on the story!

SIDDHARTH SUNDARAM, Bangalore

Most matches of the tournament, like recent Bollywood hits, provided hours of clinical entertainment and excitement, but they left little lingering memories of engagement or pride that comes only when the national team participates.

Y.G. CHOUKSEY, Pune

IPL has become a veritable golden goose for the BCCI, which has converted the world of cricket into an outright business.

VITULL K. GUPTA, Bhatinda

Vision 20:20 contains nothing but a lust for money. The profits may have converted the media and corporates, but not the genuine cricket lovers.

A. JACOB SAHAYAM, Thiruvananthapuram

It seems that Lalit Modi, private enterprises, showbiz and the game of cricket have become Siamese quadruplets, who have no hopes to survive a separation operation.

J. AKSHAY, Secunderabad

Kudos to Modi and company for having conceived and organised with tremendous dexterity, the spectacle called the IPL. The tournament marks the dawn of the new age of "cricketainment", which is here to stay.

SARAJEET KANUNGO, Kolkata

The Chosen One

It is said that a leader is born, rather than made ("Heir Not Apparent", June 16). To lead the nation, a leader requires long-term training and grooming. Even if we assume that Rahul Gandhi is a natural leader, Sonia Gandhi and other Congressmen must exercise patience and let him take his own time into becoming a leader at the national level.

K.V. RAGHURAM, Wayanad

The Congress leadership must realise that any amount of cosmetic steps will not help rejuvenate the party's past glory. The need of the hour is to identify and remove the malaise that has afflicted the organisation—deifying and excessively relying on the first family for everything.

K.R.P. GUPTA, on e-mail

If we Indians want to realise Vision 2020 or achieve the dream of a modern and developed India, then youth leaders like Rahul Gandhi must step forward without any hesitations to occupy their place in the sun.

PRASAD SATYAJIT SATKALMI, Baroda

It is not only Rahul Gandhi but Sonia too has failed. Moreover, a year is too