3 KERALA New Model Needed

- First in Governance

Thanks to remittances from its NRIs and growing tourism, the state is surging.

God's Own Country, with its Kerala Model, has long reigned in the country in maintaining the quality of life indices despite lagging in growth and investment. Right from the days of royalty, Kerala's rulers followed a welfare model in public health and education with an equitable distribution of benefits. A literate and politically-aware public has induced a spirit of competition in governance. However, the state-funded Kerala Model has been under pressure. The reason: the economic bankruptcy the state Government is sinking into, due to low levels of growth and investment. Public debt rose to Rs 57,139 crore in 2007-08 from Rs 11,420 crore in 1997. The state's gross state domestic product (GSDP) ratio is the highest in southern India at 42 per cent. The welfare state gobbles up all of its resources as the three items of non-development

HIMACHAL PRADESH
IS THE FASTEST MOVER

Improved ratings on education and health care have enabled the state to boost investments triggering employment and thus income generation to deliver higher consumption.
