

ever, by 1975 the first block, today known as the Little Theatre, rose out of the rubble. Slowly but steadily, the four other auditoriums took shape too and today all five, along with a fully-equipped recording room, a library and two art and photo galleries comprise the NCPA. "It is the only multi-faceted performance centre in India," says Suntook. Famous for its weekly theatre performances, the centre in the last few years has also been trying to promote western music with the Symphony Orchestra of India that features renowned artistes every year. But far from its famous auditoriums, NCPA hides within its confines another gem that not many know of. The centre in its first few years set up a recording studio and invited celebrated artistes such as Amjad Ali Khan, Pandit Shiv Kumar Sharma and Zakir Hussain, to record pieces for archival reference. These tapes have never been thrown open to the public and today lie ensconced in temperature controlled rooms. "But we've started the process of making this archive available to the public. We've just finished getting the consent of all the musicians' families because we don't want them to be left out," says Suntook, who rattles at least a dozen plans before adding, "It's a lot, we know. But Jamshed Bhabha taught us to go on dreaming."

"If there was any one thing that Jamshed Bhabha taught us, it was to keep dreaming."
