

THE SCIENTIFIC PIRIT

From forest wealth and space technology to camel breeding and calendar reform, the nation's thirst for knowledge is endless. The jewels in its scientific establishment show why.

FOREST RESEARCH INSTITUTE, DEHRA DUN TOUCH WOOD

The British empire was founded on wood—first the tall mast timber used in its warships which conquered the world and later, the teak sleepers on railway lines that knitted them. The establishment of a dedicated Forest Research Institute (FRI), a little over a century ago, was the culmination of its imperial obsession with wood. Since then, Asia's mecca of forestry has become much more than India's sole university dedicated to forestry.
