

music & dance

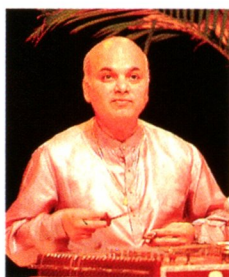

Masterly Tribute

DELHI There are stories about the well-known Hindustani classical music guru Pandit Jagannathbua Purohit's affection for his disciples—he would meticulously plan ragas for his pupils to sing on All India Radio shows. Later, he would listen to the broadcast no matter where he was and note down the high points and the shortcomings to discuss with his disciples. He mentored eminent vocalists such as Pandit C.R. Vyas, Pandit Jitendra Abhisheki and Pandit Yashwanthbua Joshi. He would often tell his disciples to learn as much as they could from him. Where do you find such gurus today?

To pay a tribute to Purohit, the Maharashtra Lalit Kala Nidhi has organised a two-day Gunidas Sangeet Sammelan on February 1-2 at Kamani Auditorium. The first day features Jayateerth Vasantrao Mevundi, a young vocalist from Dharwad, Karnataka, who has been hailed as an able torchbearer of the Kirana gharana. He is followed by a dance performance called Samanvaya by Odissi dancer Madhavi Mudgal and Bharatnatyam dancer Alarmel Valli. The duo tries to find common ground for dance articulation by exploring new dimensions while retaining the uniqueness of their own dance form.

On February 2, Satish Vyas, a disciple of Pandit Shiv Kumar Sharma, will weave magic on his hundred-stringed santoor followed by a vocal recital by the guru of bhakti, Pandit Jasraj. Listen to ashram bhajans—including Mahatma Gandhi's favourite, Raghupati Raghav Rajaram, composed by Pandit Vishnu Digambar Paluskar—presented by the members of Gandharva Mahavidyalaya choir on January 30 to mark the death anniversary of Gandhiji. Choir performances are a rarity, so look out for this unique musical rendition. At the India International Centre.

by S. Sahaya Ranjit

STRINGS OF CHANGE: Satish Vyas (above); Gandharva Choir

art

Simplicity Of Thought

BANGALORE Master of style K.G. Subramanyam will display his latest works in Chennai and Bangalore over the next three weeks. For KG, as he is popularly known, exploring art as a language is a long-standing theme. As one of the pioneering artists who demolished the barrier between artist and artisan with his work at the All India Handloom Board and as a delegate at the World Craft Council, he has experimented with toy making, tapestry and other mediums that were no longer in use, like terracotta murals and glass painting. As an artist and historian, KG draws upon the wealth of mythology, memory and tradition to "temper romanticism with wit and eroticism". His oils are usually an onslaught of colour and movement while his drawings and etchings reveal his simplicity of thought. This exhibition, called the Magic of Making Paintings, is on till February 5 at Gallery Sumukha in Chennai and from February 20 to March 8 in Bangalore.

by Nirmala Ravindran

ONSLAUGHT OF COLOUR: A Subramanyam painting

art

Three Dimensions

MUMBAI Friends Satadru Sovan Banduri, Tushar Waghela and Sohan Jakhar blend tradition and modernity with a curious and creative medley of strokes and colours at Suchitra Arts. Jakhar's work has decorative motifs floating in the background, with a hint of new-age technology. Satadru expresses the Jakhar hints at new-age tech "multifarious aspects of existence in a metropolis" while Waghela "bears a relationship to the spirit of Indian heritage, art and culture". On till February 5.

by Swati Mathur