

film review Black Sabbath

SUNDAY

Director: Rohit Shetty
Starring: Ajay Devgan, Ayesha Takia, Irrfan

"Assi, tussi aur lassi", Ajay Devgan tells Ayesha Takia, by way of a pick-up line. He's a Delhi policeman, so jokes in Punjabi are called for. Last seen turning Devgan into a strangely androgynous looking comedian on the beaches of Goa in the successful but execrable Golmaal, Shetty has now turned his attention to NO SURPRISES: Devgan and Takia

Delhi. Yes, the Archaeological Survey of India tour of the capital's heritage is pleasurable—one minute a fight near Jama Masjid, another minute a song outside Qutab Minar—but somehow one doesn't think that was the director's intention.

It's intended to be a comedy-cum-thriller, but by the time the audience gets to know what happened to the missing day in Takia's life, it has ceased to surprise or amuse. The good part about the movie is that there is no toilet humour (though there is that new Bollywood staple, gay jokes) but the bad and sad part is that it is not funny. No wonder God said, Sunday should be a day of rest.

by Kaveree Bamzai

recommendations Magic and Maze

BANGALORE Disney Live brings Mickey's magic to India for the very first time. Mickey and Minnie Mouse, Donald, Daisy and Goofy Duck along with a host of other illusionists will present an interactive theatrical event that features special moments from Disney films recreated live on stage. Watch the magical world of Cinderella as her rags turn into a beautiful gown, or THEATRICAL: Mickey and pals

Princess Jasmine levitate in the air. The role of the Master Magician will be performed by Mickey Mouse, who makes popular characters appear out of thin air. For adults, there will be some serious illusions from Jim Steinmeyer who has worked with magicians like David Copperfield and Lance Burton. Starting February 7, at Koramangala Indoor Stadium.

MUMBAI Art connoisseur and enthusiast Harsh Goenka brings A Mazing featuring 23 young artists

WINDING: Traversing a maze such as Jogen Chowdhary, Jehangir Jani, Anjolie Ela Menon, Paresh Maity and Bose Krishnamachari. A Mazing is a framework of mazes which the visitor must negotiate to reach the exit. Each artist's work will be placed on wall panels, on the floor, in boxes or hung from ceilings. Goenka says, "The artists' works have a lot of drama, a lot of intrigue and are sure to evoke significant response." At Jehangir Art Gallery, February 8 to 17.

by Nirmala Ravindran and Swati Mathur

music review Varied Notes

UTV
Rs 160

JODHAA AKBAR
A.R. Rahman's compositions for films usually promise good music and variety. His earlier releases such as Lagaan, Swades and Guru had superb compositions, but his Jodhaa Akbar is a let down. He does manage to capture the essence of the period film but his melodies don't linger. The qawwali Khwaja mere khwaja sung by Rahman himself is the only redeemer, with an underlying influence of Ustad Nusrat Fateh Ali Khan. The package comes with a bonus DVD that includes a four-minute-long theatrical trailer of the film along with a few posters, story and cast and crew details of the film.

Sony-BMG
Rs 175

HUMSAFAR
After a gap of eight years, KK returns with his second album, Humsafar, where he turns composer as well as singer. He has developed his own distinctive style that has the KK stamp—soft and well modulated voice. Aasman ke is soothing, Dekho na has a rock feel to it while Rain bhai kaari has the Bengali Baul influence. But the winner of the album is Humsafar with rich melodic variations in which KK has mixed Hindi and English lyrics to give it a yuppie feel. Credit goes to the singer-turned-composer who has been able to sustain himself in the music industry without any formal training. A good Indi-pop album worth listening to over and over again. by S. Sahaya Ranjit