sworn in as chief minister for a third consecutive time, puts him head-and-shoulders above the rest of the pack. With a nationwide approval rating of 19 per cent, he polled nearly double the number of votes than his nearest rival, Uttar Pradesh Chief Minister Mayawati.

In the 14th Mood of the Nation Poll (results and details of the main poll were published in issue dated February 4, 2008) 12,492 voters in 98 parliamentary constituencies spread across 19 states were asked to rate the performance of the chief ministers of their own states as well as to give their perception about those of the other states. True, people tend to be more bothered about bread and butter issues and governance at the local level but our poll shows that some chief ministers have acquired profiles that transcend the borders of their states. And Modi typifies this more than any one else. That 77 per cent of voters in his own state of Gujarat consider him the best chief minister should come as no surprise considering that less than two months ago, he decimated the opposition Congress virtually single-handedly. What, however, does come as a surprise is that
