

BHASKAR PAUL

"The Money Machine",
November 12, 2007

"With volcanic
crusaders like Mukesh
Ambani, the country
does not have anything to worry about on the economic front."

VIRENDRA K. TANGRI, Dehradun

The Midas Touch

The story on Mukesh Ambani is a blind tribute to him in which his father and mentor Dhirubhai Ambani's role in steering the company to great heights has been marginalised ("The Money Machine", November 12). The write-up skirts his feud with brother Anil, in which he ended up with a larger share of the family wealth. The readers have been bamboozled with bombastic figures which leave little space for meaningful analysis.
Y.G. CHOUKSEY, Pune

Thanks to greater investor confidence and a range of new business opportunities, the elder Ambani has been able to take his company to greater heights. It remains to be seen how he turns the table as far as his retail business is concerned where he has been facing strong protests.
JINU MATHEW, on e-mail

It is saddening to see a reputed magazine not presenting a balanced picture on Ambani. The story was heavily tilted in his favour.

V. BATRA, on e-mail

The elder Ambani has carved a place for himself in the world through his will, vision and confidence. However, it would be better if he spent more to light up the lives of millions of poor in the country.
A. JACOB SAHAYAM,
Thiruvananthapuram

Mukesh Ambani's RIL is a symbol of Indian entrepreneurship. Innovative creativity will continue to be a guiding factor in the future which is fraught with global challenges.
K.V. RAGHURAM, Wayanad

The cover headline is a timely tribute to the elder Ambani who has proved that if a man is focused and works hard, he can produce money out of thin air. He is a modern-day incarnation of the Hindu god of wealth—Kuber.

SUDHIR MISHRA, Bhubaneswar

How to Kill a Deal

While BJP would have liked to take the credit for the nuclear deal and is opposing it because it feels cheated, the Left parties are averse to anything related to the US ("Making a Last Ditch Effort", November 12). They should understand that a few compromises cannot be ruled out in any bilateral deal. Do they really think that a "perfect" deal with everything in our interest is possible?

D.B.N. MURTHY, Bangalore

Stung by the Past

While Gujarat Chief Minister Narendra Modi is on a collision course with his own troops, the sting operation by Tehelka has soiled his reputation, or whatever was left of it ("Sins of Silence", November 12).

It serves him right. Hopefully, the sting operation will be the last nail in the saffron empire's coffin.

R.R. SAMI,

Tiruvannamalai, Tamil Nadu

Its diabolical timing notwithstanding, the sting operation has opened up a can of worms. What happened in Gujarat in 2002 is shameful and unforgivable. But what happened in Godhra was equally heinous. It is unfair to see Godhra being relegated to the background time and again due to political expediences.

ANJUM M. SAMEL, on e-mail

There is not an iota of doubt that Modi is going to win the assembly elections yet again. In fact, the so-called secular media has helped his cause by making too much out of the riots which has angered the Hindus. They are going to vote en masse for BJP.
A. SRIKANTIAH, Bangalore