Investors across the country say how to build wealth through stock investing and what to do during volatility

■ By Narayan Krishnamurthy

April 1992. After a sustained bull run, the Indian stock market crashed, largely due to the offices of Harshad Mehta, considered the architect of the bull run. In the following two months, stock prices dropped by over 40 per cent, wiping out market value to the tune of Rs 1 lakh crore. Retail investors left the market in droves, many never to return. October 19, 2007. The zooming Sensex, India's benchmark index, crashed, leading to a widespread market collapse that wiped out Rs 2.7 lakh crore in two days. And what are investors doing? Why, using this opportunity to buy more, and

WHAT I DO WHEN THE MARKET FALLS Look for opportunities to invest.

WHAT I LEARNT As an active investor, you can't afford to be ever out of the stock markets. You need to regularly monitor your portfolio.

In 12 years, a lot has happened in the markets. At each stage, I have looked for opportunities.
