

THE NEW TERROR

An exclusive, inside look at the SHADOWY INDIAN MUJAHIDEEN, its leadership, structure, and the kind of threat it poses to the country

Who are they and what is their agenda?

■ By Uday Mahurkar

Four months, four major cities, 43 bombs, 140 dead. It's a forbidding toll made grimmer by the frequency and the physical and psychological destruction. The statistics do not speak of the hundreds of families destroyed, women widowed, children orphaned, innocent people maimed for life—unable to earn, unable to walk again, live again. They are the targets of this new, mindless brutality unleashed by a shadow Islamic terror outfit that labels itself Indian Mujahideen (IM), now emerging as the biggest threat to the Indian state in recent times. It has morphed into a leading indigenous terrorist outfit, whose fingerprints are now becoming evident in most terror attacks—from the Samjhauta Express train to blasts in Bangalore, Jaipur, Ahmedabad and, lately, Delhi. Its real-time e-mails to media

BLOODY TRAIL:
The capital is a prime target with its potential for putting pressure
on the government